FEBRUARY • 2019

INTRODUCTION

The Atlantic Coast Route is a major cycling route that aims to promote, in a sustainable way, the touristic potential of the six countries that it crosses.

It is the result of the collaboration of 18 European partners who have worked together on the Atlantic On Bike project sponsored by the InterReg program.

The Atlantic Coast Route is part of the European EuroVelo routes network developed by ECF (European Cyclists' Federation).

The purpose of this manual is to ensure the consistent and coordinated communication of the route, regardless of the country, regardless of the tool, so that it is identified and recognized as a unique product, with its specific values and personality.

It outlines in detail the elements that are compulsory in relation to positioning of logos etc, transmitting key messages, signposting and communication. It gives examples to be followed.

PITCH AND BASELINE

The Atlantic Coast Route is an invitation to experience a unique adventure with a great 1.

From Norway to Portugal, the route covers six countries (Norway, United Kingdom, Republic of Ireland, France, Spain and Portugal), providing an opportunity to discover an extraordinary range of climates, cultures and unique points of interest in a peaceful setting.

An adventure, filled with an unlimited number of experiences and life moments all with a common thread: enchantment with spectacular views and nature.

And of course a unique signage found all along the trip: the number 1 in its European flag to remind you of its affiliation with the European EuroVelo routes network.

The experienced cyclist will challenge himself/herself by covering this 9,000 km epic route with a journey of several months.

Families or less experienced cyclists can start with more accessible sections (on the southern part of the route), to get familiar with the world of cycling travel. There is no doubt that they will then have only one wish: to keep going to cover the whole route and be one of the finishers.
